2.1. Background The Staphylococcus aureus genome has been sequenced and the agr locus has been identified. The agr locus is a regulatory system that controls the expression of virulence factors. The agr locus is located on the chromosome and consists of the agrA, agrB, agrC, and agrD genes. The agrA gene encodes a transcription factor that binds to the agr promoter and initiates the transcription of the agr operon. The agrB gene encodes a small molecule signaling molecule called agr peptide. The agrC gene encodes a receptor that binds to the agr peptide. The agrD gene encodes a small molecule signaling molecule called agr peptide. The agr locus is a regulatory system that controls the expression of virulence factors.
